Mobile phones: tomorrow will be too late

In spite of the dithering by the Ministry of Health and the delaying tactics of the phone operating companies, it is now becoming clear that the mobile phone is a virulent pathogen with damaging effects that we are only vaguely aware of. Recently it was scientifically proved that there is a connection between certain types of tumour and the intensive use of a mobile phone. Most in evidence are cases of acoustic neurinoma, a tumour that develops on the acoustic nerve, as well as malignant brain tumours. According to this study the risk is multiplied by two or more on the side where the phone is held.

Are the health authorities worried about these results? Not in the least since, according to the official experts, the risk concerns only "intensive" phone users, and, as they add with a certain touch of cynicism, nothing proves that using a mobile phone always causes a tumour to develop.

They are right, but when we know that a tumour usually takes 15-20 years to develop, it would seem logical to conclude that the appearance of tumours after 4-5 years in these intensive phone users is a sure sign of a health catastrophe to come in 10 years' time. 10 years! For those who have children, it's nothing, but for the people that sell telephones it must seem a long way off.

The worst thing in this situation is that it is the younger generation that is the most in danger. It is children and teenagers who use mobile phones the most. And it is at precisely this age that the brain is the most exposed: in a child's brain almost two thirds of it are affected by the radiation while in the adult it reaches only one third of the brain, which is already far too much!

Even more worrying, the radiation increases in intensity as reception becomes more difficult. So when you use the phone in a train or a car, or when you are in a zone with weaker coverage and the phone has to keep searching for new signals, the intensity of the microwaves is considerably higher.

And with every day that passes we find more electromagnetic radiation in our daily surroundings: TV screens and computer monitors, cordless phones and wi-fi systems. All of which is horrifying. All this radiation is non-ionising, that's to say it is capable of upsetting the function of our cells, particularly in our DNA, and the functioning of our glands. Among these it is the pineal, the source of the sleep hormone and of the resistance to cancer, that is the most easily disturbed.

We could weep over this tragedy that awaits us, which everyone sees coming and which nobody is doing anything about. But wait – there are millions of mobile phones in use nowadays.

And one day, for lack of the will to face up to this problem, we will inevitably be faced with a terrible choice: your mobile or your life!

At that point we will have to give up this magic tool, resign ourselves to taking a step backwards, draw a line through all that it has brought us – will we dare?

It's at that moment that we'll see if humanity still has a will to live or not.

WHO REPACHOLI

has betrayed the obligations of his office, he is corrupt, he must answer for what he has done.

He must be brought to justice!

We wish to see this man, M. Repacholi, formerly in charge of the WHO study programme on electromagnetic fields [\[Dossier\]](#) and also ex-President-Founder of ICNIRP brought to justice, because he is a corrupt official who has betrayed the obligations of his position.

We consider that the general management of the WHO is equally responsible in that it did not take the necessary steps to deal with M. Repacholi's actions while carrying out his official duties, actions that were obviously contrary to the elementary rules of ethics as defined by the statutes of the World Health Organisation.

The legal representatives of the countries (those supplying the funding) on the governing bodies of the WHO also have a share of responsibility in that they did not denounce M. Repacholi's actions.

Today we are paying the consequences of giving free rein to M. Repacholi, the industry's puppet, who in the name of the WHO travelled far and wide to convince national institutions to adopt unrealistic limits for artificial EMFs, limits that do not protect the public, as has now been scientifically proven.

Now more than ever we must act for the sake of public health by tackling the essentials, that's to say bringing actions before the courts in order to have the statutory limits denounced and changed (for example with an expert opinion on the permitted radiation level for UMTS of 61 V/m!), limits which are the result of the WHO recommendations.

Testimonies of interest to parents and a call for M. Repacholi of the World Health Organisation to be brought to justice.
